PCD Links Community to Intersection Study through Website

PAGE ADDED ON April 4, 2010

Information on concept alternatives, recommendations and photos provided

(Hamilton, NY) Elan Planning, Design & Landscaping Architecture of Saratoga, the planning firm chosen to perform the five-way intersection study has created a website for public viewing about Hamilton's five-way intersection study. By visiting www.hamiltonintersectionstudy.wordpress.com, people can learn information on the intersection study itself, including community concept alternatives and recommendations. The site also includes photos, the power point presentation from the March 24 Open House and a specific section for viewers to leave comments and suggestions.

"Including the community as we progress with this study has always been a key component of our mission," said Roger Bauman, managing director of the Partnership for Community Development. "The two public Open Houses we hosted were met with great success. The March 24 event garnered the highest community attendance to date. This website is just another form of outreach. A simple and direct vehicle to keep the community abreast of the study's progress and provide them with a place to supply feedback. Most important, we want people to know we are listening to their concerns and opinions on this important community issue."

The PCD plans to announce a third presentation to the community and village trustees next month.

About the Five-Way Intersection Traffic and Safety Study

This study is a collaborative effort between the Partnership for Community Development, representatives from the Village of Hamilton's Planning Board, Trustees from the town and village of Hamilton, New York State Department of Transportation, Hamilton Pedestrian Committee, HBA, Hamilton Police and public works and Colgate University.
